

ABSTRACT

To ensure transmission in a flexible optical network system, a digital test signal generation/comparison circuit is incorporated in an electrical signal processing portion of a transponder. The optical network system provides transparent wavelength-division multiplex service regardless of the signal type in client optical signals. Prior to connecting a client optical line to the optical system, a selective insertion unit and a selective extraction unit enable quality assessment of the client optical line.